Don't wait until 'tomorrow' to get education started

By Master Sgt. Brian Orban
8th Fighter Wing public affairs

As much as I hate to admit it, I've been bad.

No, I've been awful.

I'm still working on my college degree, and I'm way behind the power curve.

For years, I kidded myself about getting my degree "tomorrow." At my first duty station nearly 20 years ago, I figured I had plenty of time to get my degree out of the way. "I'll go to the education center tomorrow and get enrolled," I kept convincing myself.

It didn't work out that way. The promise to start "tomorrow" turned into "next week," and next week became "next month" and so on.

Unfortunately, it's easy to fall into this type of "education procrastination." We somehow manage to forget about enrolling in classes until after they're in session. We blame long duty hours for not going to school. We just couldn't get away from work, we try to convince ourselves. Then we feel bad about letting another school semester slip by, vowing we won't let it happen a second time – until we let the same thing happen again.

When these excuses get worn out, we find new ways to put off the need to learn. In my case, it was getting married and starting a family. My wife and I decided early on to have children, so as soon as one was out of the crib and partially self-sufficient, another baby was on the way.

"No time for school now," I'd fool myself into believing.

All three of my daughters are now in school, and I've run out of excuses. I've also started running out of time before I'm due to retire.

Tomorrow is here.

It took a few baby steps on my own to get me focused. Education counselors were the best start. With just a few keystrokes, they had my entire education record on a com-

PACAF numbers

- ❑ Roughly 99.9 percent of the enlisted force in the Pacific region has a high school education
- ❑ About 75 percent have semester hours toward a college degree
- ❑ Less than 17 percent of the enlisted force has an associate's degree
- ❑ More than 32 percent of all Air Force officers have advanced or professional degrees, such as law or medical
- ❑ Only 26 percent of officers earn master's degrees
- ❑ An additional 6 percent of officers earn a professional degree or doctorate.

puter screen showing me what I'd earned and what I needed. They encouraged me to take tests through the College Level Examination Program and DANTES Subject Standardized Tests program.

These tests offer rapid rewards right off the bat. If you successfully pass them, you earn college credits toward your degree. If you don't do so well, it doesn't mar your grade point average, and you can try again in a few months if you choose. Best of all, the tests are free for those in uniform.

After successfully completing three of these tests and racking up 12 credit hours (without ever stepping into a classroom), it was time to knuckle down and knock out those last credits. I made the appointment with a counselor, determined what I needed and walked down the hall to speak to a university counselor. Within an hour, I was registered and ready to take two classes, both of which were funded by the Air Force.

Total cost for the registration fees and tuition: Zip, zero, zilch, nada.

Yes, I'm still working on my degree, but I'm a lot closer than when I started. One class this semester and another in the fall, and I'll have my degree.

Most people I've talked to say

Kunsan is a great place to get a degree. In fact, 20 percent of those who come here leave with an associate's degree in hand, according to Glenn Smith, base training education services team chief. Another three percent will leave here with a bachelor's degree.

I'm not alone when it comes to education procrastination. According to statistics recently released from Pacific Air Forces, 99.9 percent of the enlisted force in the region has at least a high school education and 75 percent of them have some semester hours going toward a college degree. However, less than 17 percent of the enlisted force has an associate's degree, and only a handful of them go on to earn a bachelor's or graduate-level degree.

Meanwhile, more than 32 percent of all Air Force officers have advanced or professional degrees with roughly 26 percent of them earning master's degrees and an additional six percent going on to earn a professional degree or doctorate.

One thing I've learned in recent years is there's a price people pay if people don't get their degree. In addition to being at a disadvantage when it comes time for promotion boards to meet, they miss out on opportunities to broaden their career. Some duty assignments, especially teaching jobs, will only accept people with a degree.

Then consider what happens if people choose to let "tomorrow" become "never." During my psychology class last year, an older gentleman sitting ahead of me was one of those who waited too long. Now retired from the Air Force, he was struggling to finish his associate's degree.

Here's the clincher: Once he left the service, a lot of the college credits he earned while on active duty didn't carry over after he retired. He was now backtracking to take additional classes for his undergraduate degree.

It's time to climb out of the education procrastination trap. "Tomorrow" is here. Be ready.

Volleyball courts

Q: I'm concerned about the volleyball court next to Bldg. 609.

Contractors are using sand from the volleyball court as fill material for the new dorm being built. Also, there's apparently a contract in place to service all volleyball courts on base over the next three weeks, so why are the contractors tearing down our volleyball court before the contract ends?

Not having the court leaves dorm residents like me with one less form of recreational on base.

A: Thank you for your call.

Contractors did not use sand from Bldg. 609's volleyball court as fill for the new dorm construction. However, the contractor received approval to use the sand in the new dorm's ground-breaking ceremony.

After the ground breaking, the contractor relocated all sand to the north side of Bldg. 609 where it will be used to construct a new volleyball court.

Estimated completion date for the new court is Sept. 18.

Learning through experience:

Wolf Pack members get hands-on training in bomb building

By 1st Lt. Brooke Brander
8th Fighter Wing public affairs

What does it take to build a bomb?

Participants in IRON VIPER learned firsthand what goes into building a bomb from start to finish here Monday.

The 8th Maintenance Squadron munitions flight hosted 36 Kunsan members from a variety of operational and support career fields in a pair of training sessions that focused on hands-on live munitions building.

"IRON VIPER is a class that the munitions flight hosts for pilots, intel officers and aircraft maintenance officers to give them a better insight into the munitions assembly process," explained Capt. Robert Meehan, 8th MXS munitions flight commander.

Monday's up-close, hands-on training sessions were also open to representatives from the 8th Comptroller Squadron, 8th Civil Engineer Squadron and 8th Fighter Wing History Office.

"The course is designed to teach combat ammunition production, specifically how we take an intergraded tasking order and break it down, gather the components, assemble the weapon and then deliver it to the flightline," said Capt. Meehan.

During the morning IRON VIPER training session, 23 pilots from the 35th and 80th Fighter Squadrons spent about two hours building and disassembling some of the munitions items that they fly with everyday. The afternoon session included 13 individuals from the other base organizations. Both sessions built GBU-31s, also known as the joint attack munition or JDAM, and GBU-24, a laser-guided precision munition.

"It's important the people taking part in the class understand that munitions aren't just sitting out here already assembled and ready to go; we have to build them," said Captain Meehan. "We also want them to understand the impact of a 'frag change.'"

The captain said a frag change is when there's a change to the flying schedule that changes the munitions requirements. Weather, target location changes and new information on the characteristics of a target can all drive changes to the munitions required to have the desired effect. The original "frag" may call for particular munitions that are in the process of being assembled when they receive a frag change requesting different munitions.

When this happens, the munitions troops must stop building the bombs, disassemble the munitions, clear away all components and start the entire assembly process over with the newly ordered munitions slowing the production process.

This causes a major slowdown in the entire process, the captain said.

Staff Sgt. Marc Leistico, 8th Operations Support Squadron intelligence analyst, learned first hand the amount of work that goes into a frag change. It's not always as simple as swapping one trailer of munitions for another, he said.

"We had to disassemble the bombs we had just built," said Sgt. Leistico. "That took a lot of time and effort. I immediately felt sympathy for the men and women at the bomb dump for every time there has been a change to the plan."

The process of supplying our pilots with the correct munitions is a lengthy process, said 2nd Lt. Michael Culton, 8th OSS.

"It gives you a sneak peek into a demanding career field that many of us take for granted," the lieutenant said. "A lot of prep work goes into one pilot's press of a button."

Maj. Gena Stuchbery, 8th CPTS commander, was impressed by the teamwork and flexibility inherent to the munitions flight and its troops.

"After building half dozen bombs, we received a 'frag change' order," she said.

"We had to disassemble the bombs ... and start over from scratch. I have a great deal of respect for what our ammo guys do."

"We hope that IRON VIPER helped the classes better understand how the munitions flight provides world-class support to the flightline," Capt. Meehan said.

Act improves Airmen rights

Servicemember's Civil Relief Act provides protection for mobile, deploying Airmen

By Capt. Blake Williams,
8th Fighter Wing legal office

Junior Wolf Pack members leasing a car before being assigned to Kunsan don't have to make payments on a car they're not driving under the newly revised Servicemembers Civil Relief Act.

According to the act, Wolf Pack members now have the option to terminate their lease. Also, servicemembers who lease a car while at a stateside base then move to an overseas base or deploy for at least 180 days may terminate the lease.

Meanwhile, those who leased a car in Alaska or Hawaii and moved or deployed for at least 180 days anywhere out of those states can terminate the lease.

The only requirement is the servicemember had entered the lease with the intent to use the car primarily for personal or business transportation. It doesn't matter if the military member's spouse drove the car or if the spouse still drives the car.

As long as the servicemember's name is on the lease, they may terminate the agreement.

If a military spouse is the only one who signed the lease, the SCRA doesn't apply. However, there are times when the car dealer is willing to obey the spirit of the SCRA anyway. To terminate the lease, members must give the dealer who leased the car written notice and a copy of their military orders and the car. For more information on this issue, contact the legal office at 782-4283.

"Airman Mills serves as the customer support administrator for the 8th OSS commander's support staff. Airman Mills' focus when first arriving at Kunsan was the operational readiness inspection preparation and his efforts greatly enhanced the rating for the entire Wolf Pack. As a security forces augmentee, Airman Mills displayed superb attention to detail by providing key mission statistics to senior leadership and affected base agencies during the ORI. Airman Mills has often forfeited days off and volunteered his weekends, to ensure 30 computers in the 8th OSS were updated to Windows XP. His tenacious work ethic was the crucial link in the squadron's ability to comply with the 8th Fighter Wing directed upgrade on schedule. His program knowledge directly supported the 8th FW command post as he helped guide a report of survey for a $29,188.95 loss. He is a powerhouse trainer with a thorough and enthusiastic attitude. Airman Mills is an outstanding Airman and he exemplifies what today's Airmen do to ensure the mission accomplishment."

AFPC notifies Airmen of security breach

Courtesy of Air Force Personnel Center Public Affairs

RANDOLPH AIR FORCE BASE, Texas — The Air Force last week began notifying more than 33,000 Airmen including those at Kunsan regarding a security breach that occurred in the online Assignment Management System.

The notification comes after Air Force Personnel Center officials here alerted Air Force and federal investigators to unusually high activity on a single user's AMS account in June.

AMS, an online program used for assignment preferences and career management, contains career information on officers and enlisted Airmen, as well as some personal information such as birth dates and Social Security numbers, said Col. Lee Hall, director of assignments at AFPC.

It does not contain personal addresses, phone numbers or specific information about family members.

A malicious user accessed about half of the officer force's individual information, while only a handful of noncommissioned officers were affected, said Lt. Col. John Clarke, AFPC's deputy director of personnel data systems.

The individual used a legitimate user's login information to access and download Airmen's personal information.

"We notified Airmen as quickly as we could while still following criminal investigation procedures with the (Office of Special Investigations)," said Maj. Gen. Anthony Przybyslawski, AFPC commander. "Protecting Airmen's personal information is something we take very seriously, and we are doing everything we can to catch and prosecute those responsible under the law.

"We notified the individuals involved, outlining what happened and how they can best insulate themselves from this potential risk," the general said. "We've taken steps to increase our system security. We're working with all Air Force agencies to identify vulnerabilities. We must keep our data protected."

In the meantime, AFPC officials said officers may login to the virtual military personnel flight at www.afpc.randolph.af.mil/vs/ to see if their information was viewed. If it was, they will receive a pop-up banner after login which will provide additional information.

The small number of enlisted Airmen who have had their information viewed will be contacted directly. Airmen may also go online to www.afpc.randolph.af.mil and click on "AMS Information" to determine if their personal information was viewed.

Officials also said Airmen may decide to follow Federal Trade Commission guidelines for dealing with identity theft at www.consumer.gov/idtheft/index.html.

Under the Fair Credit Reporting Act, beginning Sept. 1, everyone is entitled to one free credit check annually. To request this free report, visit www.annualcreditreport.com/. Any Airman who believes they are a victim of identity theft should contact the base OSI detachment at 782-4522 and the base legal office at 782-4283.

Cultural Corner

Did you know?

The traditional Korean dress hanbok design is characterized by a two-piece outfit without pockets and buttons that is closed with strings, belts or cords. The women's hanbok comprises a wrap-around skirt and a bolero-like jacket and often called chimajeogori, "chima" being the Korean word for skirt and "jeogori" the word for jacket. The men's hanbok consists of a short jacket and pants, called baji, that are roomy and bound at the ankles. Both ensembles may be topped by a long coat of a similar cut called durumagi.

In traditional Korean garments color is used symbolically. White was the basic color most widely used by the common people. It symbolized a modest and pure spirit. Red signified good fortune and wealth and thus was used in woman's wedding garments. Indigo, the color of constancy, was used for the skirt of court ladies and the official coats of court officials. Black, symbolizing infinity and the fountainhead of all creation, was used for men's hat. Yellow, which represented the center of the universe, was used for royal garments and common people were forbidden from wearing yellow.

At present, hanbok, as everyday attire, is worn chiefly by older people and by the general population during special occasions such as traditional holidays, weddings and 60th birthday celebrations.

Wizards extend magical season

Wizards keep competition spellbound

The 8th Operations Support Squadron Wizards continued to rely on its enchanted skills and teamwork to made short work of the 8th Security Forces Squadron B team in an 11-4 victory Aug. 15.

Down by a handful of runs going into the fourth, the Wizards' infield used its magic to turn three double plays – a season best for the team – to pull into the lead.

According to Wizards coach Don "Diesel" Johnson, the team kept its cool when it was down by those early runs to focus on making important plays at the plate and outfield. "We came together as a team," he said.

The Cops ran into problems as they tried to regain control of the game, Johnson said. "They were looking at the big picture instead of taking smaller bites and, in turn, became overwhelmed."

With two weeks remaining in the regular season, the win continued to keep the Wizards in the American League's top seat with a narrow half game lead over the 8th Maintenance Squadron Ammo squad. Earlier in the week, the Wizards captured an easy win after the 8th Medical Group Medics forfeited their game Aug. 12.

"They didn't show up; [they were] trying to get over their fear in playing us," Johnson said in a veiled challenge to the Wizards' AL rivals.

Wizards defuse Armament squad

The Wizards of the 8th Operations Support Squadron extended its regular season record to 12-1 after they neutralized the 8th Maintenance Squadron's Armament team 7-4 Aug. 17.

The night's game came down to the effectiveness of the coaches, according to Wizards coach Don "Diesel" Johnson. "They were out coached," he said.

According to Johnson, the Armament team struggled to keep up with the game's tempo. At the same time, the Wizards cashed on several key errors made by their opponent's outfielders.

"Their right fielder...could not catch the ball. It was like he was on our side," Johnson said.

With two week left in the regular season, the Wizards' race for the division title remains in the air with the 8th Maintenance Squadron's Fab Flight trailing by three games.

Lugnuts arrest Defenders

The 8th Logistics Readiness Squadron Lugnuts improved their regular season standing after they apprehended the 8th Security Forces Squadron Defenders in a 12-7 victory Aug. 16.

The Lugnuts opened the game with an eight-run tear in first inning and played solid defense to keep the Defenders at bay.

"The SFS is a great team in upper echelon of the American League, and the LRS has a lot of respect for their caliber of play," said Lugnut coach Kevin Benjamin. "They're fundamentally sound and hustle and dignity on every play."

Lugnut centerfielder Pete Osthus went 3-4 at the plate with 5 RBIs. Joel Martinez played a rock-solid game at shortstop to anchor the Lugnut defense.

"The Lugnuts have a never-say-die attitude," Benjamin said. "Records aren't the reason this team plays. It's the love of the game, the LRS competitive spirit and the undying support from the entire squadron."

A lot of teams focus is on their win/loss records, but the Lugnuts play for the love of the game, the coach added. "A lot of teams think of our team as an 'easy win,' and we showed them wrong."

Wolf Pack sweeps invitational tourney

The Wolf Pack scored a total of 87 runs in three games to crush the competition in five innings or less as they won the Osan Mustang Round Robin Invitational at Osan Air Base Saturday.

"Our offense was superb. We totally dominated the tournament from the start. No one even had a chance at all," said Wolf Pack coach Donnie Morris.

Kunsan started off the tournament by shutting out the Osan Mustangs 24-11 in five innings. They went on to crush Camp Humphries 30-3 in three innings and closed out the tournament by once again thrashing the Mustangs 33-4 in four innings.

The Wolf Pack improved its team hitting average was .705 for the weekend, fueled by the efforts of sluggers like Chris "Moose" Bast, who recently joined Kunsan's line up.

"We are peaking just at the right time now," Morris said. "This weekend was just a follow up to the Korea-wide tournament championship we won back on Aug. 8 and 9."

Volcano Kid, a member of the World Wrestling Alliance of Missouri, catches Dave Duponte off guard and drags him across the ring during the Alliance’s visit to Kunsan Aug. 18. Although Dave Duponte was caught by surprise, he was able to gain his composure to finish the round. But Volcano Kid continued similar tactics and eventually won the match.
